Executive Summary:

According to the Center for Public Integrity (CPI), Florida earned a D grade, ranking 26th in the U.S. for legislative financial disclosure in 2009. Louisiana ranked No. 1 on CPI's disclosure ranking, up from 44th in 2006. Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal worked with his state legislature in 2008 to pass new ethics laws that moved their state from the bottom to the top of the list. Louisiana Economic Development, that state's counterpart to Enterprise Florida and the Florida Department of Economic Opportunity, touts ethics reform on its website. Gov. Jindal said he set out to "completely transform the ethics laws in (his) state to encourage increased business investment and job creation". According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, Louisiana has maintained a lower unemployment rate than Florida every month from January 2008 through June 2012.

The clearest way to see where Florida needs to go to improve its financial disclosure ranking is to compare the 2011 financial disclosures of Gov. Jindal and Florida Gov. Rick Scott. Financial disclosure information required in Louisiana but not in Florida includes:

- More detailed outside employment information
- Nonprofit board memberships
- More detailed financial disclosure information from spouses
- Income from government and gaming interests
- More details about clients from professional or consulting services
- All financial transactions exceeding $1,000
- Government staff campaign contributions to public officials that employ them

According to the Center for Public Integrity, 27 states put financial disclosure filings of state officials online, but Florida does not. Integrity Florida has posted the personal financial disclosure filings from 2011, 2010 and the first term in office for Florida's legislators and top state officials to www.integrityflorida.org. Integrity Florida also put online disclosures of potential voting conflicts from the 2012 legislative session, disclosures of legislators working for firms with clients before state government, disclosures of gifts received by legislators and top state officials and lists of individuals who have not filed financial disclosures and fines owed to the Ethics Commission.

Key Findings:

- The median net worth of all Florida legislators increased by approximately 15-percent from $507,846 in 2010 to $583,461 in 2011.
- 11 legislators worked for lobbying firms during the 2012 session.
- 12 legislators disclosed a total of 33 potential voting conflicts in 2012.
- More than $100,000 in gifts reported by legislators and top state officials in 2012.
- Four legislators failed to disclose 2012 financial interests as of July 26, 2012.
- 4,284 current Florida public officials and employees failed to disclose 2012 financial interests as of July 26, 2012.
- 66 current and former Florida officials and employees owe a total of $87,199.03 in fines for late filing of financial interests in past years as of July 9, 2012.

Background

History of financial disclosure in Florida:

Florida voters adopted the “Sunshine Amendment” to the state constitution in 1976 after then Governor Reubin Askew led a petition drive to place the amendment on the ballot. After a series of political scandals, including one involving his own lieutenant governor, Askew felt strongly that financial disclosure for public officials was necessary “to restore the confidence of the people.” The amendment contained standards of ethical conduct for public officials and required thousands of state and local officials to disclose their finances. Florida voters approved the “Sunshine Amendment” by one of the largest margins ever recorded with every county in the state voting for it.

After the Form 1 requirement was first adopted in 1975, Askew wanted to achieve more complete financial disclosure than the Legislature had allowed. The “Sunshine Amendment” in Florida’s constitution requires thousands of state and local public officials to file annual financial disclosure statements. Those financial disclosure statements report the public official’s assets and liabilities as well their net worth and sources of income. The intent of the financial disclosure requirement is to give the public confidence that their officials are not personally benefiting financially from their public service, other than their salaries.

Askew sought to give citizens the tools to hold their government officials accountable. “You’ve got to remember in government whose business you’re doing: the people’s,” he told the Florida Society of Newspaper Editors in 2009. “And if you’re doing the people’s business, you’ve got to give them the tools to judge the product.” Since the adoption of the “Sunshine Amendment” in 1976, little has been done to update what may be the most important “tool” of all; financial disclosure.

Current situation:

In Florida, looking up the outside financial interests of a state legislator can take hours. Typically the financial disclosure reports are filed on paper forms with the state Ethics Commission. The public can access the financial disclosure forms for a small fee through a public records request. Reporting under the current Form 1 was first required in 1975; Form 6’s started in 1977, when the “Sunshine Amendment” went into effect.

This year, Integrity Florida placed the financial disclosure forms for the Governor, lieutenant governor, cabinet officials and state legislature online, in a searchable and downloadable format, which the public can access online through www.integrityflorida.org.

Integrity Florida collected these documents by paying a total of less than $10 for the records and then posted them to www.integrityflorida.org using Scribd.com technology at no additional cost. The annual deadline is July 1st for filing the more detailed Form 6 required of the Governor, lieutenant governor, cabinet officials, state legislators and county officials as well as the less detailed Form 1 required for certain state employees and local government officers. There is a grace period in effect until September 4th in 2012 for those who failed to meet the July 1st deadline for filing disclosure forms. The two month grace period for late filers is standard each year. After a form is two months late, a $25 daily fine applies for every late day until the form is filed, with a $1,500 cap, which is 60 late days.

37,532 Florida public officials and employees were required to file financial disclosure forms in 2012. Here is a breakdown of the 2012 filers:

- 1413 Form 6 filers (Constitutional officers)
- 979 Form 6 filers (Judges)
- 170 Form 6 (Senior Judges)
- 13,483 Form 1 (State)
- 21,487 Form 1 (Local)

Why does public access to officials' financial disclosure matter?

Public access to financial disclosure forms enables the public to hold their government officials accountable for their votes. The public deserves to know the outside employers, additional income sources and financial assets, including stocks in companies regulated by the state, which might influence lawmakers' votes.

Another safeguard against conflicts of interest in the state legislature is the reporting requirement. Currently, in the House and Senate, a member has until 15 days after a vote on a piece of legislation to file notice that they have a conflict of interest and will somehow stand to benefit from that vote. Those conflict of interest statements are only accessible if a member of the press or the public files a public records request. This information can be critical to know, especially considering the number of legislators who are now also employed by lobbying firms or other private companies with interests before the legislature and state government.

Financial Disclosure Louisiana vs. Florida

According to the Center for Public Integrity (CPI), Florida ranked No. 26 in the U.S. for legislative financial disclosure and Louisiana ranked No. 1. Integrity Florida reviewed the CPI report and found 11 primary differences between the two states that contributed to Louisiana's top ranking versus Florida in public official financial disclosure:

1. Louisiana requires outside employment job title, Florida does not.
2. Louisiana requires spouse employment information, Florida does not.
3. Louisiana requires outside officer/director entity description, Florida does not.
4. Louisiana requires spouse officer/director information, Florida does not.
5. Louisiana requires spouse investment information, Florida does not.
6. Louisiana requires officials with clients to define the range/income amount, Florida does not.
7. Louisiana requires disclosure of spouse client information, Florida does not.

8. Louisiana requires spouse real-property information, Florida does not.
9. Louisiana requires reporting of spouse name, Florida does not.
10. Louisiana routinely reviews filings for accuracy and completeness either through formal audit process or informal review process, Florida does not.
11. Louisiana publishes list of delinquent filers on Web or in printed document, Florida does not.

Online Financial Disclosure

According to the Center for Public Integrity, 27 states offer online access to the financial disclosure statements filed by its lawmakers, but Florida does not. Integrity Florida has posted financial disclosure information for the state legislature and top state officials online at no cost, demonstrating that state officials could provide the same service for Floridians. Integrity Florida utilized technology available from the free website Scribd.com, the world's largest online library, for this project.

Florida received a C- grade in two separate categories of Legislative Accountability and Executive Accountability on the Florida Corruption Risk Report Card released in 2012 by State Integrity Investigation. While Florida ranked high on most of the indicators of accountability, the ranking for whether citizens can access the asset disclosure records of the executive branch and the legislature was lowered because Florida does not make the disclosure records “available to the public online in a meaningful and accessible manner.”

The median net worth of all Florida legislators increased by approximately fifteen percent from $507,846 in 2010 to $583,461 in 2011.

Four legislators failed to disclose their 2012 financial interests as of July 26, 2012: Sens. Bullard, Evers and Siplin and Rep. Randolph. According to the Florida Commission on Ethics, 4,284 current Florida public officials and employees failed to disclose 2012 financial interests as of July 26, 2012. The Ethics Commission released to Integrity Florida a list of 66 current and former Florida public officials and employees who owe a total of $87,199.03 in fines for late filing of financial interests in past years as of July 9, 2012. The lists of late 2012 filers and those officials owing fines for late filing from previous years have been posted to www.integrityflorida.org.

Legislators Working for Lobbying Firms

Integrity Florida has identified 10 state legislators who received a primary source of income from firms with registered lobbyists before the state legislature in 2012. The following legislators reported income from firms with registered legislative lobbyists on their 2011 Form 6 disclosure of financial interest forms:

- Sen. Oscar Braynon, Pittman Law Group PL
- Sen. Miguel Diaz de la Portilla, Becker & Poliakoff PA
- Sen. Arthenia Joyner, Stiles Taylor & Grace PA
- Sen. Joe Negron, Gunster Yoakley & Stewart PA
- Rep. Joseph Abruzzo, Weiss Handler Angelos & Cornwell PA
- Rep. Richard Corcoran, Broad and Cassel
- Rep. Jose Diaz, Akerman Senterfitt
- Rep. Matt Gaetz, Keefe, Anchors, Gordon & Moyle (Rep. Gaetz informed Integrity Florida that his firm no longer employs a lobbyist as of May, 2012)
- Rep. Joe Gibbons, Akerman Senterfitt
- Rep. Greg Steube, Becker & Poliakoff PA

In addition, Sen. Ellyn Bogdanoff lists the Weiss Handler PA firm, a firm with legislative lobbying clients, as a secondary source of income on her 2011 Form 6.

Out of all legislators on the payroll of lobbying firms during the 2012 session, only Sen. Arthenia Joyner and Rep. Richard Corcoran filed disclosures of potential voting conflicts, according to public records provided by the Florida Senate and Florida House.

Six lawmakers receiving income from lobbying firms saw an increase in their net worth from 2010 to 2011:

Sen. Ellyn Bogdanoff (Increase of $90,537)

2010: $568,323

2011: $658,860

Sen. Oscar Braynon (Increase of $2,900)

2010: $45,500

2011: $48,400

Sen. Miguel Diaz de la Portilla (Increase of $173,947)

2010: $486,094

2011: $660,041

Sen. Joe Negron (Increase of $92,056)

2011: $804,196

Rep. Joseph Abruzzo (Increase of $38,114)

2010: $104,384

2011: $142,498

Rep. Jose Diaz (Increase of $27,873)

2010: -$45,259

2011: -$17,386

As of July 25, 2012, four legislators filed disclosures of their firm's lobbying clients who were represented before the state legislature in 2012:

- Sen. Ellyn Bogdanoff: firm's legislative branch lobbying clients: Alzheimer's Community Care, City of Boca Raton, Broward County Sheriff's Office; also another unreadable client name on the form.
- Rep. Joseph Abruzzo: firm's legislative and executive branch lobbying clients: City of Boca Raton, Palm Beach County Sheriff's Office and Broward County Sheriff's Office.
- Rep. Jose Diaz: firm's legislative branch lobbying clients: Camillus House, Citrus Health, Epilepsy Foundation of Florida and Florida Guardian ad Litem. Rep. Diaz disclosed a longer list of the clients the firm represents before state government but does not specify if others are represented before the state legislature. He stated in his filing that he believes he is exempt from this disclosure filing since he is "of counsel" with his firm.
- Rep. Matt Gaetz: firm's legislative branch lobbying clients: Children's Services Council of Palm Beach County, CompSouth, Dispensing Solutions, Inc., Florida Industrial Power Users Group, Florida Inland Navigation District, Florida State University School Board of Directors, Waste Management, Inc., Wheelabrator Technologies, Inc. and Woodbury Health Products.

One legislator receiving income from a firm that registered to lobby the state legislature did not disclose any legislative lobbying clients but did disclose the firm's clients represented before other state government agencies for 2012 as of July 25, 2012:

- Sen. Joe Negron: no reported firm clients before the state legislature but many firm clients represented before state agencies.

Six legislators receiving income from firms that registered to lobby the state legislature did not file any client disclosures for 2012 as of July 25, 2012:

- Sen. Oscar Braynon: Pittman Law Group PL
- Sen. Miguel Diaz de la Portilla: Becker & Poliakoff PA
- Sen. Arthenia Joyner: Stiles Taylor & Grace PA
- Rep. Richard Corcoran: Broad and Cassel
- Rep. Joe Gibbons: Akerman Senterfitt
- Rep. Greg Steube: Becker & Poliakoff PA

Additionally, Sen. David Simmons filed a disclosure that his law firm represented several clients before state agencies.

Potential Voting Conflicts

While legislators have up to 15 days after each vote to disclose conflicts of interest, only 12 legislators disclosed a total of 33 potential voting conflicts in the 2012 legislative session, according to public records obtained by Integrity Florida from the Florida Senate and Florida House of Representatives. Integrity Florida would like to recognize the 12 legislators who disclosed potential voting conflicts in the 2012 legislative session:

- Senator JD Alexander
- Senator Greg Evers
- Senator Don Gaetz
- Senator Arthenia Joyner
- Senator Gwen Margolis
- Senator Jeremy Ring
- Representative Ben Albritton
- Representative Richard Corcoran
- Representative Rick Kriseman
- Representative Charles McBurney
- Representative Michelle Rehwinkel Vasilinda
- Representative Pat Rooney

Additional Financial Disclosure Observations

The following are additional Integrity Florida observations from Florida's financial disclosure forms and other public records where improvements are needed:

- Public officials with ownership stakes in companies that do not disclose the names of other owners, partners and shareholders and in some cases did not report income received from these entities.

- Public officials with board of directors' positions in organizations with ties to state government.
- Public officials with ownership of stock in Florida companies and bonds related to public entities funded by state government.
- Public officials with significant land holdings and ties to major landowners whose property values are impacted by state government.
- Public officials who elected to file their tax returns, which in some cases provided less disclosure of personal financial interests than the detailed Form 6 requires. Additionally, some filed tax returns jointly, which makes it a challenge to distinguish the official's financial interests separate from their family members. Some copies of tax returns are the actual forms filed with the IRS and some appear to be unfiled drafts.
- Public officials with income beyond their primary government salary from additional public entities that are funded directly or indirectly by state government.
- Public officials determining their own real estate value as opposed to utilization of property appraiser data.
- Public officials using hand writing on forms that is not legible.
- Public officials using broad value estimates rather than exact figures.
- Public officials picking and choosing the "as of" date for disclosure of their financial interests.
- Public officials using acronyms to describe income sources and other financial interests.

Recommendations

1. Florida should adopt the more detailed financial disclosure form used by Louisiana.
2. The public should have access to an online, searchable database of state officials' financial disclosure information, potential voting conflicts and gifts received.
3. Potential voting conflicts should be disclosed in advance of all votes.
4. The Florida Commission on Ethics should randomly audit a sample of public officials' financial disclosure forms each year.
5. The grace period for late filers should be shortened from two months to one month after the July 1 deadline before fines begin to accrue.
